

Clickers are a student response system used to promote active learning in the classroom. In a clicker system, each student uses a device (called a clicker) that looks like a TV remote to answer questions posed by the instructor in a power point presentation. Clickers actively engage students, monitor their level of understanding, and provide for immediate feedback. Clickers are used in a variety of academic programs.